

周筱珊

S11027008

Shou-Nan

HsuWriting

Please Don't do That

It dates back to many years ago, when I was just a shy little girl.

I was not pretty sure why our homeroom teacher what do you mean by “homeroom teacher”? asked me to sit next to him. Maybe it was because he was always at the top of our class, and I was the last. But this was not the reason that I didn't want him to be my desk mate. I'm not that narrow-minded—I guess. A bit interesting. Kind of wordy. And we find repeated sentence pattern.

In fact, he always picked his teeth with his finger and then wiped those white stuff on the desk. More precisely, after he scraped plaque what plaque? off, he would touch everything. Sometimes, he picked up my pens without my permission, using his moist finger to touch my lovely pens. Before I knew his bad habits, he had “borrowed” my blue pen for several times?. So when he asked me if I had any extra one, I took a glance at his pencil bag. After that, I stared at him, “Why there are three blue pens in your pencil bag?” The girl sitting in front of him suddenly turned around, and, pointing to one of them, exclaimed, “That's mine!”

All classmates were shocked. How could a good student like him do such a strange thing? They frowned at him, each of them was with wore a puzzled look. It seemed like better “as if” he had noticed those gazes. He slowly opened his mouth, like a sloth, “Well. . . I just forgot.” The ending is dramatic. Fine.

1. Use more advanced words.
2. Sentence length: there should be more variations in length.
3. The title does not suit the content too well.