A Superwoman in my Life-Life

My grandmother always takes good care of everyone in my family. She often ~~talks~~ told us ~~the~~ stories when she was young. She was born in a big family, the children of the family were too much for the parents to raise her. As a result, she was given to another family in which they didn't raise so ~~much~~ many children. Although she was given to a smaller family, she still needs ed to work in order to ~~prove~~ provide her brothers for them to go school. She not only helped her mother to do the domestic affairs but also went to ~~the~~ a factory to earn some money.

After she grew up and married my grandfather, she became a full-time housewife and did her best to take care of her two sons. Nowadays, she is still the most important one in this family. Without her, the whole family could be tired and starved. It's no exaggeration to say that she impacts me the most and inspire me to be a better person.

After reading your writing, the reader easily feels endeared to your grandma.

The biggest problem with your writing is grammar. Well, mistakes in grammar can be a serious problem. Pay attention to verb tenses.

Also, when you first mention something or someone, usually (not always) you use "a" instead of "the". When you use "the," you assume that reader is already kind of familiar with what you are speaking of.

Then you pay attention to countable and uncountable nouns.

Lastly, the topic sentence is okay, but there should be more variation in the lengths of your sentences. Long sentences to give details and depth, while the short ones serve to emphasize.
