~~A person I admire~~ A Person I Admire

My father is the person I admire the most. I admire him for his love for me and his sacrifice for his family. He has protected and supported me since I was born until now. He worked~~s~~ hard to earn money for my family and feed me. My father's like a friend to me. He teaches me all the values and morals I must live by. And Is this "And" necessary? he himself lives by all the values. He believes in practicing what he preaches. So replace "So" with "Indeed"? I find my father very honest. And "And" again? he never finds it difficult to be that way. My father is kind and generous. If I would use "When," or "Whenever" anyone approaches him with a genuine need, he helps them to whatever extent he can. When I was young, my father guided me to plant trees, swim with me, tell me fairy tales, and forever after, that was also "remains"? the most beautiful time in my life. He taught me what is right and only when I grew up did I feel the love that my father had for me ~~was~~ is boundless. The man who had hands with rough cuts but was warm and wide patted me when I failed. I still remember when I didn't do well in the university exam, it was ~~the~~ father with the wrinkles in the corners of his eyes after years of hard work and the black hair dotted with silver Bothering. Too long. Perhaps you should move "who comforted me" to another place. Right after "it was father"? who comforted me. He said ~~that~~. "Your father's son has done very well, life is not only one way. It's important that you don't give up" The father's eyes at that time were unusually warm, as if he saw had seen his boundless love and trust for his child. And there are many other things that my father ~~has done~~ did for me. Sometimes a father's heart and hands can be very tough, but deep inside it is also something very soft and full of love for the children. Fathers are not as good at expressing their emotions ~~outwardly~~ as mothers, but they always care for and support their children at the right time.

Nice that you give lots of examples.

The biggest problem: Too many short simple sentences
