

Selfless hero

The one lying on the hospital bed is the person who I worship most: my uncle. Yesterday, he and I went for a walk as usual. Suddenly, we saw a little girl who was going “going” is all right, but “about” might be better to be hit by a speeding car. At that moment, I was frightened and just stood ~~with a blank~~ empty-minded, but my uncle didn't. He left no stone unturned to barrel interesting here, but the description remains unclear his way and save the little girl. However, there are two sides to every question; the good one was that the girl was in one piece, and the bad news was that my uncle was seriously injured.

“Have you regretted ~~to save~~ for saving the girl?” I asked. “Never.” he responded without hesitation. “Light a lamp for others, illuminate others, and also illuminate yourself.” He taught me a precious lesson “The reason why the sun is great is that it consumes itself forever.” I didn't believe people would save strangers' lives even if they might be hurt or sacrifice ~~originally~~, but my uncle proved the contrary ~~this could be possible to achieve~~. He's brave, admirable, and absolutely honorable. He's the role model I want to imitate.

1. A nice example.
2. Minor grammatical mistakes
3. A bit humorous
4. Vary more the lengths of your sentences.